STORY OF SHODE-18LAND

Aleck passed indiscriminately under the name of his old family or of his present owner; but if he was interrogated in the matter his reply was sure to be-

" Pae no Dudley nigger, salt, leastways not naterally. I'se Easton blood, massa, I'ee only Dudley by marriage !"

And although perfectly devoted to the Colonel, as his proper "Massa" yet the old darkey never failed in his heart of hearts to make a secret distinction between him and "Missy Margiret." She was the true representative of the family-his family; and consequently the true sovereign of Aleck's powers, over which the Colthel only reigned as a regent. "Lor bress me, she's true Emton, she is,' the old man used to ejaculate after the profusion of hows which had greeted her passing had subsided into a gentle undulatory motion of his body, and he stood gazing after her. "Poor old missy, would'nt she ha' been proud of

When the Colonel was arrested and ent into town, Aleck had been abent in Narragansett at that animal Saturnalia so long kept up it, the colony under the title of "nigger election." To say that A took was elected Governor is synonomial with saying that Aleck's pocket and rum parrel had held out beyond all competition, and that Aleck hunself at the head of his electors had heen for a week most gloriously and gubernatonially tipsy. "Drunk as a King" would have been a weak form of words in Narragansett, in those days, compared with "double as a nigger-governor."

His week's leave over however, Allock had presented himself punctually at the Form us sober a valet as ever wore white neck-eleth; and his dismay at learning of the imprisonment of "ale Massa" was only rivaled by the indignation he felt, when to the cup of his bitterness was added the news that " young Missy"-the heiress of the masters, inches. tive to him of all that was exalted, and fine, and generally "fust chop" on earth, had accompanied her father in his captivity.

One thing, and one only prevented him from proceeding at unce to town. Aleck was a-to speak mild y; Alick was not constitutionally brave; and the two things in the universe of which he stood in greatest awe, were the Colonel's cane and the " headless woman."*

It was already past night-fall when he reached the Farm, and directly on his road to town by the rained house and the steep hillside, where that terrible phantom was oftenest seen. Aleck preped once untwice from the kitchen windows into the deep gloom, and once even he made a bold effort to conquer his fears. But just us he reached the little bridge at the cutrance of his master's premises, something tall and white rose suddenly from the earth before him. Aleck staid not for a second look; with chattering teeth and wool that almost straightened used with fear, he retraced his steps do., it the lane somewhat! laster than I acmer Tillinghest's old white mure shambled along in the opposite direction.

But early the next morning, long before the sun had risen, (but not; however, till after the first cocycrow had given him assurance or salaty from the terrible apparation,) Aleck was on his way to town, and thus, was the first to greet the colonel on has rising in the morning.

Case of Judge Lering. Are all legislative enactments, in a popular government, equally valid and obligato ry? Is a federal officer hound in all cases to execute the law? and is he properly and morally justifiable in so doing? Is a citideliberate disobedience to the law?

These questions, and other kindred ones. are suggested by the case of the Hon, E. G. Loring of Massachusetts, now a Judge of Probate for Suffolk district, who as U. S. Commissioner, adjudged the fugitive slave, Anthony Burns, to be returned to his master, three or four years ago. This act of Judge L. gave great dissatisfaction to a large class of citizens in the Bay State, and the late Governor was repeatedly memorialized to remove Judge Loring from office

An address to Gov. Banks, demanding Loring's removal, was allopted by the lower House of the Massachusetts Legislature a few days ago, by a vote of 127 to 101; and the Boston Post, Hartford Times, and other Lecompton organs, are down upon the offending representatives with tomahawk, scalping-knife, and any quantity of ill n enes.

It must be tolerably clear we think, that people do not ace alike, in regard to the questions we have set down. Is it owing to a lack of light, a dullness of perception, or an excess of blind predjudice?

To the People of Rhode Island. Understanding from reliable sources that Thomas A. Jenckes and Wm. P. Sheffield both members of the General Assembly and as I believe tools of interested parties, have been engaged in aspersing my private character, through insinuations and assertions repeatedly urged in and out of the legislative halls, and among other falsehoods have accused me of having been guilty of a breach of trust in relation to the purchase of a farm as agent for Robert II. Ives, which even if true has no bearing on the case involved in my petition to the General Assembly, as a reference to the Court papers will readily show-and the real facts and origin of which alledged breach of trust are correctly stated and explained in a book lately written and addressed to the people of Rhode Island by Thos. R. Hazard. And whereas the pertinacity with which this wide spread and unfounded falsehood continues to be asserted and re-asserted, inpels me to believe, that its prevalence is the result of a systematic conspiracy, to utterly destroy my private character in the estimation of members of Assembly and others that the many and powerful elements of oppression that circumstances have combined against my cause, may be the better able to zen, under any circumstances, excusable for stifle and resist any legislative investigation of the wrongs I complain of.
